You must ensure that r1's IPv4 loopback address exists in r3's inet 0 routing table.

Referring to the exhibit, which statement is true?

- A. A policy can be configured on r1 to redistribute 172.16.100.1/32 into OSPFv3, which would cause r3 to eventually learn the route and place it into inet 0.
- B. A RIB group can be configured on r3 to copy that route into inet 0 because 172.16.100.1/32 exists in r3's inet6.0 table.
- C. An IPv4 unicast realm can be enabled on each router.
- D. A policy can be configured on r1 to redistribute 172.16.100.1/32 into OSPFv2, which would cause r3 to eventually learn the route and place it into inet 0.

Answer: C

Explanation:

By default, OSPFv3 supports ONLY unicast IPv6 routes. One would have to configure OSPFv3 to support multiple address families including IPv4 unicast, etc. JUNOS OS maps each address family to a separate realm. You configure each realm independently. To support an address family other than unicast IPv6, you configure a realm that allows OSPFv3 to advertise IPv4 unicast.
