NEW QUESTION: 3

What are two differences between dynamic clusters and static clusters? (Choose two.)

- A. When creating a static cluster using an application server template, any changes made to the template after creating the instances do not change the instances.
- B. Using static clusters in an Intelligent Management enabled environment will acquire some of a dynamic cluster features.
- C. Dynamic Workload Management is enabled by default in dynamic clusters.
- D. The application placement controller can start and stop a dynamic cluster that is in automatic mode only.
- E. Using the autonomic request flow manager (ARFM) in manual mode will not affect dynamic cluster mode.

Answer: A,C

Explanation:

A: The dynamic workload manager is enabled by default and assigns weights to the application server instances.

E: When you define a static cluster, you can select an application server template on which to base all the application server instances that you create. However, any changes that you make to the template after creating the instances do not change the instances.
