Which two are true about Singletons?
A. A Singleton must implement serializable.
B. A Singleton implements a factory method.
C. A Singleton has only the default constructor.
D. A Singleton improves a class's cohesion.
E. Singletons can be designed to be thread-safe.
Answer: C,E Explanation:
B: The Singleton Pattern is one of the commonly used design templates when there needs to be a control on how an object can be created. This design pattern proposes that at any time there can only be one instance of a singleton (object) created by the JVM. The Singleton class's default constructor is made private, which prevents the direct instantiation of the object by others (Other Classes).
E: The singleton pattern makes unit testing far more difficult, as it introduces global state into an application. It should also be noted that this pattern reduces the potential for parallelism within a program, because access to the singleton in a multi-threaded context must be serialised, e.g., by locking.
